SAGE, or Students for the Advancement Global Entrepreneurship, is a business orientated competition where teams compete to present the best business idea. Recently my team, Odwa Mthetwha, Chase Whiting and myself flew over seas to San Francisco to represent South Africa in the World Finals for 2019. Our journey began at O.R Tambo International Airport. From there we flew through Munich, Germany, to San Francisco. The competition was held at the University of Berkeley California and this is also where we stayed for the duration of the event. Unfortunately, we did not progress beyond the 1st round of judging, however we were highly acclaimed for our presentation skills and subject knowledge with many of the judges commending us. Other highlights of our trip included a trip to Pier 39, a walk around Berkeley, seeing the Golden Gate bridge and Alcatraz Island from a distance and simply experiencing another country. Our time was not wasted, and we gained as much information and advice as possible before flying home once again through Germany, this time Frankfurt. This is not the end for our business idea because we intend on going all the way through with it. Novo Veridus will one day become a household name.
